| Room 11               | WW1  | Spotlight We are all P.E.O.P.L.E: Equality, Diversity and Inclusion and co-production   |  |
|                       |  | In this session we explore why co-production relies on diversityto be effective and how diversity is a key principle of coproduction. Building on the findings from SCIE's Co-productionWeek around the theme of 'What's Missing?' a SCIE reportfound more diverse voices and hearing a wider range of viewswas missing from co-production. We explore how to make this areality, demystify some key themes around EDI and hear anexample of co-production and EDI in action from people withlived experience and the Integrated Director of Commissioningof Adults Services at Greenwich Council for an interactive Q&A. |  |

|    |      | Mental health services in England received a record 5 million referrals during 2023 (up 33% from 2019), with the number of people in contact with mental health services steadily rising.   |
|----|------|---|
|    |      | Local authorities are key to delivering mental health care andsupport in the community. This session will look at how councilscan build and maintain partnerships at a time when they areunder increasing strain, build community resilience and addressthe sectors readiness for reform of the Mental Health Act andthe move towards Community Mental Health. The session willalso discuss how to achieve successful transitions betweenchildren and adult mental health services.   |

Through intensive, andsometimes long term, support for families, the reunification teamhas increased the number of stable reunifications in the localauthority and calculated cost avoidance of £2million per year.                                       |

| 2F              | TS3      | Where next for adult social care and support? People and the sector driving change   |

|                 |          | In its pre-election Manifesto, Labour committed to undertaking a "programme of reform to create a National Care Service (NCS), underpinned by national standards, delivering consistency of care across the country". Now in Government, there has – at the time of writing – been no further mention of building an NCS, and the main focus of the Health Mission so far has been on the NHS.  |
|-----------------|----------|---|
|                 |          | For those of us drawing on care and support or working in the sector, itis not uncommon to sense a lack of urgency on, or priority for, adultsocial care at a national level. While no doubt frustrating, we shouldremind ourselves that – between us – we have many pieces of thepuzzle already. We have a strong and shared sense of direction asarticulated in the Social Care Future vision; we have an excellentframework for what good care and support looks like through ThinkLocal Act Personal's Making It Real statements; we have countlessexamples of innovative services designed and delivered in coproductionwith people; and we have great ideas and ambition for a reformedsystem, many of which are captured through the ADASS Time To Actroadmap. |
|                 |          | In short, there is plenty we can be doing now that both supports peopledrawing on care to live a good life, and demonstrates the type of careand support system we want for the future. Furthermore, while theconcept of a National Care Service is more at 'blueprint' than 'nuts andbolts' stage, there are things we could be advising the Government todo to improve the lives of people drawing on care and support.   |
|                 |          | Join this session to hear experts' views on the things we are collectivelydoing, or could be doing, which should play into the reform debate andthe opportunities for wider leverage through developments such as the10 Year Plan for Health. Share and contribute your own thoughts andperspectives to help create a discussion underpinned by hope andoptimism.   |
